Fed up of low pay and no respect at work? Join the union

McDonald's workers like you are making history! They have organised in a union--the BFAWU bakers' union--for better pay and working conditions and to demand the respect they deserve at work.

In Crayford, London and Cambridge, they are leading the first McDonald's strike in UK history--and it's already having an impact.

After they announced their intention to strike, McDonald's announced that by the end of 2017 they would offer every worker the option of a guaranteed hours contract.

Fast food companies make mega-profits through the super-exploitation of their workers, using zero hours contracts and low pay as a way to line the pockets of the bosses.

In the US, and New Zealand, fast food workers have stood up, struck back and are fighting for $15 an hour and a union.

They have so far made real gains in some cities improving workers' lives, from wage rises to ending zero hours to union recognition, giving them more protection and security in their job.

Sign up to the campaign, join the union and meet other fast food workers who are fed up of low pay and poor conditions and want to do something about it.

The campaign is supported by Jeremy Corbyn, who popularised the demand for a £10 an hour minimum wage and to end zero hours contracts.

• These protests, actions and leafletings are about supporting workers inside the stores--like those striking at Crayford and Cambridge

• Fast food workers are contacting the union to find out more--You should too if you're fed up of low pay, crap conditions and not getting the respect at work that you deserve. Sign up your workmates too!

• Get involved--you can do so in confidence.
